Royal Inspection Of Ulster Factories.

· London, To-day. His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, was received with tremendous enthusiasm yesterday, when he made a tour of inspection of some of the leading industries in Northern Ireland.

His tour included a visit to the Line Thread Mills at Lishurn, reputed to be the largest in the world, and to the world's greatest rope factory in Belfast. He was also accorded a great welcome when he appeared at the Ex-Service Men's Colony at Cregather, on the outskirts of Belfast, and later, much to the delight of the 400 patients, went round several wards of the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Yesterday evening, he made a brief au revoir speech, which was broadcast in Northern Ireland and was relayed from English stations .-British Wireless Service.

In order to get a graceful fall halves and place in shallow material such as lace mousseline, the material is often stiffened by starching it. Sometimes only the flounce of a skirt is stiffened, the body part being left soft to cling to the moulded lines of the figure. Sometimes a thin frock is worn over a slip which fits closely to the figure, made of soft or even of plain furnishing chintz ready to serve add gingerale. is added. high on one shoulder.

Plainly Cut Skirt Sound Foundations.

A plainly cut skirt of thin woollen material can be used as the foundation for as many tunics as you like to buy or make. One might be satin, another Shantung, another printed crepe de chine, and another soft printed wool. The tunics vary from seven-eighths to Russian length which is just to the hips. The complementary coat will, of course, be seven-eighths length, and of the same material as the skirt.

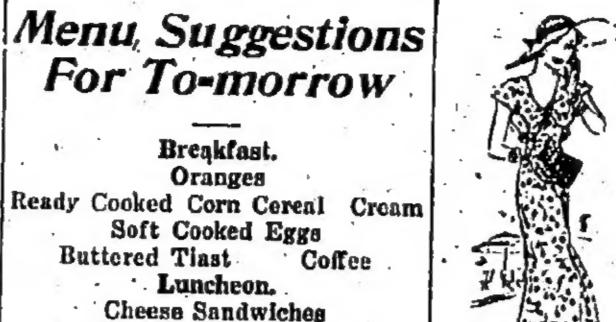

. The tunic idea is applied also to evening gowns. One skirt was deeply sungray pleated from the knee line and worn with a slimly fitting tunic. Another attractive model showed a tunic of silver lace over a skirt of grey-white satin that looked like silver. The tunio was made with a low square neckline.

The decollete which has had the biggest success in Paris this season has the front cut in a rather high upward point or oval. A necklace is attached to this, passed round the neck, and joined to a wide loop of the dress material which comes up from the low cut back. The necklace and loop are then twisted so that the back is crossed by broad X-shaped braces.

A troop of naked children ran screamin Hong Kong yesterday morning on ing up and down the river-bed, playing stags and wolves, while half-tamed dogs snapped at their heels, and some girls waded along the edges hunting for crayfish. Two of them had a quarrel in midstream, and he could hear the slaps as wet hands met wet skin. Then, from somewhere behind the crest of the upland, came the yelping of a dog. A nagging yap—yap—yap, that bespoke a bristled mane and a shaggy body leaping to and fro. If the Strong Man could have pricked his ears he would have done so.

As it was, he rose to his knees among the gorse bushes and turned his face upwind.

To the right, where gold and azure met, something moved on the skyline, coming down on the wind: then another, and the shrieks of the herd-boys came faintly across the distance. The string of kine blundered down the long slope, and as the first rough, white beast came level with him, tossing her straight horns, the watchers ducked swiftly, and Mrs. Y. S. Long Ago Stroies Alan, The Pirate

Alan had been brought up to be a pirate, and the first time he went to sea was a great day for him. He lived in the reign of Richard the Lion-hearted, when rich harvests could be reaped from the sea. There were ships of all nations, carrying crusaders, richly-dressed nobles, gold, provisions, jewels, and arms to the Holy Land, and it was difficult to tell a pirate vessel from any other.

With his father, some young nobles, and a brave crew, Alan sailed away quite openly to seek adventure for the glory of England-that is what they called it! They went to the Island of Sicily, where Englishmen on their way to Palestine often stopped and built themselves castles. It was said that the Churches there were full of gold. King Richard himself had stopped in Sicily for some months, and had given magnificent crown of gold to one of home. the Churches. Alan and his father thought it a great pity that so many jewels should be doing nothing in for building castles at home!

For the base, saw a piece of wood three and a half inches square. After carefully smoothing the edges with glasspaper, fix it to the bottom of the pillar with two brass countersunk screws, as indicated in diagram E. In fixing the parts together, see that the pillar, top part and base are arranged aquare with each other, as shown in the first diagram. The finished candlestick will look until you are working two trebles in quite smart if you give it a coat of

The woman made a movement mongst the crackling furs, and suddenly, he grew blindly angry with her. There was but one way to cow half-tamed beast, there could be but one way to break a disobedient woman. And ere this he would have saved, her some teeth for a necklace had she pleased him. Somehow this thought made him angrier than before, and, the meal having come to an end, he reached for a stick. The woman shivered a little, huddling herself closer, and the dog slunk cringingly away from him: it could also-remember beatings. The man's hand was almost upon her, when-Wough! Wough! Yap-yap-yap! Wough! Wough!

The barking was querulous with fear, and they heard the gr-r-r-r of a retreating snarl. Then came a sharp yell of mortal pain, a whining, and a pause.

The man grabbed a hammer-like club, weighted with stone, and stood irresolute. The woman, drawn away from him, was absolutely still; watching the semicircle of luminous night with big, strained eyes. There seemed to be a long silence (he had forgotten the couple of dead cubs thrown down at the cave-mouth to be skinned at dawn). Then a dark something came between the entrance place and the glitter of a constellation; paused, and a heavilymaned lion, half in, half out, was blinking stupidly at the flame, snuffing the mantaint in deep snuffs. 20th Nov. There was just the fraction of a second's check, the wild beast's quarter of a heart-beat's pause between sight and action, and the Strong Man had swung up his stoneheaded club, had sprung shouting, and swiftly there followed the dull crack of shattered bone.

It was over. The lion lay quite quiet, with his skull amashed, and the Strong Man, with one foot on Deck "Whippet Racing.'

"It is surprising these days how helpful the public is and how interested it is in passing along any thoughts it may have for the betterment of the service or for the entertainment of the passengers, and many of the recommendations and suggestions have merit, states the Shipping review." There is, however, a certain proportion that is somewhat comic. For instance, the other day we had a note from seen anything, save the brown hawk had fathered running by their a passenger who was our guast on one of the recent cruises who must have been very much impressed with the horse racing, and his suggestion was that he thought the promenade deck running around racing, which would be a great source of amusement to the passen-

Beginning

The Red-haired Woman lay face notice. downward on the skins, shaking. He called her, and she came, catching her breath oddly, and he wondered how she had been able to force, for she shook like quaking grass. Together they dragged out the carcases to the little platform before the cave, where the dog still thrashed about in his death agony The two cubs lay limply by a dark patch of curdled blood. One had been turned over by the lioness and partly licked. There was blood in cave, too-and a thick smudged pool at the entrance, but it was no time to fetch sand, so they let it lie. As they tugged at the carcases the Strong Man's grunts were echoed sympathetically.

Very meekly the Red-haired Woman held the water-pot for his thirst, and very meekly put her mouth to it when he had drunk his fill. Then she built the fire up cunningly, and sat, seemingly intent upon it, though she watched him out of the corners of her eyes.

The Strong Man squatted beside her; she did not shrink. He put his hand on her hair, and she bent her head as if to display it to him. Truly it was a wonderful colour Like a fox's mid-winter coat. The man was filled with a vast satisfac-To-morrow he would bring her wild strawberries in cool leaves, and red-berry spoils for her threading. The lion's teeth also should be pierced, and strung. No other woman of the cliff-dwellers would possesses such a necklace. They had drawn very close together, so close that the woman, leaning a little back, made bold to touch the crab'sclaw amulet that hung at his neck. The tense strength of his arm made her green eyes swim liquidly and their warm' breaths mingled as he fondled her.

Outside the five carcases stiffened in their congealing blood, and in the bleak darkness the wolves lifted their noses to the eternal stars and mourned;

ATTEMPT TO FLOAT M-2 ABANDONED.

Salvage Temporarily Suspended.

The attempt to raise the submarine M2, which sank in West Bay, off Portland, on January 26 with the loss of 60 lives, was temporarily abandoned recently after one of the most dramatic struggles in the history of naval salvage. The vessel now lies at the bottom of West Bay, where she has resunk with three of the four lifting pontoons still attached to her. At one time she was within 10 feet of the surface, but when success seemed assured a mishap to the pontoon gear caused the bows of M2 to point down at a steep angle.

Relays of divers and salvage operators, aided by searchlights, went down to see if it were not possible to bring her level again with only the one lifting pontoon forward. The battle went on al night, but at dawn it became obvious that the struggle was hopeless and orders were given to resink the submarine. She went down quickly, and all the laboure of the past month, which had succeeded in raising her 98ft. from the bottom of the sea, went for nothing. The submarine will have to be examined by divers before any attempt can be made to re-float

RUSSIA BUILDING NEW VESSELS.

Mercantile Fleet Grows Apace.

Moscow.-By the end of this year the Soviet mercantile fleet will have been considerably enlarged by the addition of a number of new vessels which are now under construction in the shipbuilding yards of the U.S.S.R.

Six motor freighters, two of 6,400 tons each and 4 of 8,000 tons each, are nearing completion and shortly there will be launched two timber freighters, of 5,500 tons

Last month the Soviet mercantile fleet in the Black Sea was - augmented by 4 motor ships each of 3,000 tons. Two new oil tankers, each of 10,000 tone, are to be added very shortly. Tass.
